What makes people happy? Why is everybody so complicated? Why is it so hard to connect with another human being? How do I be a good parent? Did my family make me crazy? Why does it feel like I am lost more often than found? These are just some of the questions that Mr. Vineberg tackles in this collection of essays. He does so with a dose of humility, wit, and above all curiosity. How else can a person try to be a better human being, seemingly fail at it all the time, yet continue in the effort? I'm Human, Now What? is a refreshing exploration into what makes us human. It is a captivating dialogue, full of reflection - a quest to find solutions and explanations to day to day life quandaries. It is flush with sincerity and piercing insights. The author dives into himself and his environment with gusto, seeking answers. His conundrums and life challenges are relatable and resonate with anybody struggling to be a better person. This book bravely and confidently ventures into philosophical and existential inquiries, always coming from a place of personal growth and improvement. This book is highly recommended for human beings.
